We're bringing you a collection of at-home learning activities that parents can use to boost their child's academic, motor, communication, and social-emotional skills while they're home from school. These fun and inexpensive activities will keep your child learning and give you easy ways to connect with them during the evening routine.

1. Give mealtime a math infusion: Meal time is the perfect time to get children counting, measuring, estimating, comparing, and recognizing shapes. Ask your child to measure and count cups of ingredients, count how many plates and utensils are needed for the whole family etc.

2. Supercharge your storytimes: Your daily book reading sessions are golden opportunities to actively build early literacy skills. To boost vocabulary knowledge, watch for words you think your child may not know and briefly define and talk about them. When you reread a book, ask your child if they remember what the word means, and try to use the new words at other times of the day to reinforce knowledge. To build letter recognition skills, try pointing to letters as you say their names, singing a slowed-down ABC song while you point to each letter in the book.

3. Make a museum: Your child's favorite museum; they can make one at home with a little imagination and a few simple materials. If your child has collected little treasures over the years (rocks, shells, toy dinosaurs, buttons, etc.), show them how to arrange their collections in themed displays using shoe boxes, small jars, etc. Help children label their treasures—a great way to practice letter writing and recognition—and build their language skills by encouraging them to give "tours" of their personal museum to visitors at home!

The children may be given oral work / practice work that will take 20 - 40 minutes daily to enhance their concepts and skills.
